The family live in a 1990's semi-detached house in a lovely location in The Netherlands. The attractive village of Ameida is situated next to the River Lek which is one the major Dutch rivers. This is a rural setting with panoramic views of the countryside. It's a lovely area for cycling as the landscape is flat. House swappers are welcome to use the owners' bikes..there are 5 bikes and an e-bike! Another great advantage with this area is that nearby is a sandy beach and swimming in the river is a great summer pastime! Nearby is a bus stop where once an hour there is a bus going to Utrecht and also one once an hour to Rotterdam.

Their nearest shop is 500metres away & nearest eating places, & the church mentioned later are all about 1 km.

The garden is separated from the neighbours, but it is open in the back, where it looks out over the farmlands behind the house. Being on the south-side of the property the garden is lovely & sunny. There is a playground nearby for children, and cycling, walking, swimming & boating on the river.

The family attend the PKN dutch reformed church in Ameida. This is a thriving fellowship where about 300 people attend the Sunday morning service and 200 in the evening. The style of worship is a good mix of contemporary & traditional. Services are all in Dutch, however many people speak English and house swappers would receive a warm welcome! More info on the website...which will need translation unless you speak Dutch! <http://www.pkn-ameide-tienhoven.nl/>

And further info from the family:-” In the summer school holiday there is a service on the camping ground near the river. That is 2,5 km from our house, this is less formal and easier to understand for people who don't go to church very often and it's also more suitable for little children. There are babysitters for children up to 6 years old for during the service in church, so this is not during the service at the camping, because this is more suitable for the children.”
